Ireland in the Nineteenth Century Leon Litvack, Glenn Hooper, 2000 Hooper (Irish and Scottish studies, U. of Aberdeen, UK) and Litvack (English, Queens' U., Ireland) present 13 interdisciplinary contributions from the fields of law, politics, English, anthropology, and history which explore the interactions between urban core regions, rural peripheral areas, and the larger national structure for the constructions of identity. Organized along the lines of the above categories, topics include the Irish imitation of Britain's Great Exhibition of 1851, the level of support that the Young Ireland movement hoped to receive from Germany in their bid for national independence in the 1840s, the rise of literary regionalisms, and the relationship of land distribution to regional concerns.
