

Acute Encephalitis Syndrome In India

MI Sahadulla, Sayenna A Uduman

The Epidemiologic Features of Acute Encephalitis Syndrome in Central India Rajnish Joshi, 2009 Acute encephalitis syndrome (AES) is a disease condition characterized by presence of fever, and altered consciousness with or without presence of seizures or a neurological deficit. This definition is broad, and AES may be caused by a wide variety of neurotropic viruses, bacteria, protozoa, fungi or may even be non-infectious in etiology. Most AES is however considered to be due to a viral encephalitis, a condition which is common in many developing countries. The epidemiologic features of AES, especially in adults are still not well defined, and this study is first of its kind from India. This dissertation consists of three original studies and two systematic literature reviews. We first performed a retrospective chart review of all patients with fever presenting to a single hospital in central India, to determine proportions of patients with AES, and to understand diagnostic and management practices in this condition. We found that AES accounts for about 20% of all acute fevers, has a high mortality, remains frequently undiagnosed, and is mostly empirically treated as malaria. In the subsequent year we designed a descriptive study to understand the temporal and spatial profile, and survival characteristics. We also conducted a case-control study to understand risk factors for AES. We found that most AES occurs in hot and humid months of the year, and proximity to a river or stream may be associated with development of the disease. About half of all patients with AES died within 30 days of disease, and low Glasgow coma score, and need for assisted ventilation significantly predicted hazard for mortality. In our extensive laboratory testing of cerebrospinal fluid and serum samples obtained from 152 AES cases suspected of having viral encephalitis, we found 31 (17%) patients who had a confirmed viral etiology. Enteroviruses were the commonest etiology (9.2% of all AES cases) followed by flaviviruses (4.3% of all AES cases). Based on serology 16 (8.8%) patients had probable leptospirosis. In a third of all cases etiology remained unknown. Low socioeconomic status was the only risk factor significantly associated with AES. These studies have provided novel insights into epidemiology of AES in India, and it is likely that most adult AES is due to water borne enteroviruses rather than vector borne flaviviruses as previously believed.

India's Public Health Care Delivery Sanjeev Kelkar, 2021-03-05 This book describes the present awful state of India's Public Health Care Delivery, its dismal planning and implementation. It argues that it can be remedied comprehensively and effectively, using its 'own already present' resources. A radical re-evaluation of some sacrosanct ideas and discarding many of these, especially in Primary Care and its structure is required. It can be done without disadvantage to the last man served. This book starts with the sea change India has undergone and emphasizes new ways of managing health. High quality work force creation and its deployment, an unsolved problem is effectively given a solution. The bulk of the book discusses the entire public health care structure and function and how it can be newly laid out with proper work force allocation, hitherto grossly inadequate, including professionals from other training backgrounds. It is total solution that will help India to achieve the goal of Universal Health Care.

Current Topics in Neglected Tropical Diseases, 2019-12-04 Neglected tropical diseases (NTDs) is a diverse group of communicable diseases that prevail in tropical and subtropical conditions in 149 countries. NTDs affect more than one billion people and cost developing economies billions of dollars every year. According to the World Health Organization (WHO), NTDs mainly affect populations living in poverty, without adequate sanitation, and in close contact with infectious vectors, domestic animals, and livestock. Migration, as well as climate change and variability, are key factors in NTD prevalence. Therefore, NTDs deserve more study. Recently, viruses transmitted by vectors (arboviruses) that affect not only people living in the tropics, but also travelers and migrating populations, have been causing epidemics. Examples of these viruses include Dengue, Chikungunya, Zika, Mayaro, and encephalitis viruses. These viruses emerge and reemerge in multiple regions of the world, as occurred in the Americas recently (2013-2017) with Chikungunya and Zika. This book aims to update the significant epidemiological and clinical research of NTDs in many aspects with a multinational perspective.

Neurobiology of Infectious Diseases Tatiana Barichello, Felipe Dal-Pizzol, Rodrigo Hasbun, 2024-11-30 Neurobiology of Infectious Diseases covers mechanisms underlying infectious diseases. It is divided into six distinct sections, beginning with the foundations of Neuroinfection. This section includes chapters on the role microbiota-gut-brain axis and specialized blood-neuronal barriers play in neurobiology of infectious diseases. The next three sections detail various bacterial infections, parasitic infections, viral infections, and fungal infections of the central nervous system. The last section reviews the proteins and other peripheral mediators that affect the central nervous system. Internationally contributed by experts in the field this book sets the foundation of neurobiology and infectious disease. Neurobiology is the study of cells of the nervous system and the organization of these cells into functional circuits that process information and mediate behavior. Current research is vital for determining pharmaceutical and medicinal treatments for neurological disorders, psychiatric disorders and diseases.
