Explosives and Demolitions ,1998 Field Manual (FM) 5-250 is the technical compilation of the explosives and explosive techniques used by United States (US) military forces. It is designed to serve as the reference manual to support combat operations as well as peacetime training missions requiring demolition applications. The manual provides a basic theory of explosives, their characteristics and common uses, formulas for calculating various types of charges, and standard methods of priming and placing these charges. It also serves as a guide to familiarize leaders and soldiers with the demolition-effects-simulators (DESS) program. Included in this discussion is the assembly, priming, and firing of all currently approved simulators. The manual provides field soldiers with the ability to conduct demolition operations using the conventional detonating-cord initiation systems as well as the recently approved modernized demolition initiators (MDIs). This manual is a stand-alone manual designed to offer a baseline knowledge of demolition techniques. Extreme caution must be used when encountering situations that require several demolition applications concurrently. The officer in charge (OIC) must maintain ultimate responsibility for the demolition-system design, ensuring the safe and efficient application of explosives.--Preface.
