Coloringbook Eric M Nevins,2024-11-30 One bright and breezy afternoon, Little Larry was exploring the meadow behind his house when something very unusual caught his eye. It wasn't a bird, or a butterfly, or even a shiny stone. No, it was something much more curious-a tiny, sparkling door, no taller than his knee, tucked between two old oak trees. Larry rubbed his eyes in disbelief. He had explored this meadow a hundred times, but he had never seen anything like this before. The door shimmered in the sunlight, as if it were calling to him, inviting him to open it. With his heart racing with excitement, Larry knelt down and gently pushed the door open. To his surprise, a swirl of rainbow-colored mist poured out, filling the air with the sweet scent of cotton candy and the sound of soft laughter. Larry stepped through without hesitation, his curiosity bubbling inside him. As soon as he crossed the threshold, he found himself in a magical world-a garden like no other. The trees swayed and giggled, the flowers danced in the breeze, and the grass beneath his feet seemed to tickle him, making him laugh out loud. It was a place where joy grew on every leaf, and every petal had a secret giggle of its own.
