Figure - A diagram or illustration used to present information visually. It can be created using various tools like Microsoft Word, PowerPoint, or specialized software like Adobe Illustrator. In books and magazines, the diagrams which help to show or explain information are referred to as figures. Diagrams are often used to illustrate concepts, processes, or relationships between different elements.

Figure key, legend, caption - These terms refer to the labels and descriptions provided for each figure. The figure key explains the symbols and colors used in the diagram. The legend provides additional context or definitions for specific parts of the figure. The caption describes the figure's purpose and findings.

The Results section of a manuscript includes tables, figures, and other non-textual elements that illustrate the findings of the research. Figures are essential for presenting complex data and results in a clear and concise manner.

nature, extended figure, supplementary figure - These terms refer to different types of figures used in scientific publications. Nature is a leading journal in the field of science. Extended figures provide more detailed information than standard figures. Supplementary figures are additional figures that support the main findings of the study.

Supplementary Figure S1, S2 - These are additional figures provided alongside the main text of a manuscript. They often contain extra data, graphs, or details related to the main findings.

LaTeX - A typesetting system commonly used in scientific publishing. It allows authors to format their documents precisely, including the placement of figures and equations.

scale - Refers to the size or magnitude of the data presented in a figure. It is often indicated by axes labels or legends.

'7cm' - A unit of measurement indicating the width of a figure. It is often used to specify the dimensions of figures for publication.

subfigure - Refers to a smaller figure included within a larger figure. It is used to present multiple related pieces of data or results side-by-side.
